80s 90s country music songs

Stories of the devil, ghosts of the stars go back to life and a driver who gave his life to save a bus full of school bus children. These are some of the stories in these scary, and some aren't so scary, songs that make awesome tolu listen. The devil went to Georgia. Scott Legato / Getty Images You don't even have to be a country music fan to know this song. Johnny's story and his extraordinary game that beats the devil in a dull contest that won him a golden violin is one many people have heard. Text: When the devil is over, Johnny says, Well, you're a pretty good old son. But if you sit in that chair right there, and let me show you how to do it.1 While this song isn't scary in the normal sense, Randy Travis sings about digging up the memories of the love that's long since died. Text: I resurrected memories of dead love. yes, I'm going to sit here alone tonight digging up bones. The ghost in the hall is actually the narrator of the song. She sings that since she broke up with her love, he has taken her body and soul, and the rest is spirit. But later in the song, you'll know she's not sad, because there's another ghost living in the house. The ghost of her love. Text: I am all that is left of two hearts in forests that once burned out of control. You took my body and soul. I'm just a ghost in this house. This song has an interesting storyline. The cowboy was out on a dark and windy day when he witnessed a herd of red cows thundering into the sky. After the cattle are riders who try to round them up, but can never reach them. This is their destiny: to ride the devil's flocks through heaven forever. One rider warns the cowboy that if he doesn't change his path, it will also be his destiny. Text: If you want to save your soul from hell riding on our range. Then, cowboy, change your path today, or you'll ride with us. Trying to catch a flock of the devil through these endless heavens. This song speaks of meeting hank williams' ghosts at midnight in Montgomery, Alabama, on the anniversary of his death. Text: And somewhere midnight train slowly passes. I could hear that tear that I was so lonely, I could cry. A man hitchhikes and gets caught by a driver who says his name is Big Joe. They drive at night and Big Joe drops the guy at the truck stop, giving him a cent to buy coffee. When the man comes in and orders his coffee, saying it's Big Joe's, he learns the story that happened 10 years ago: Big Joe, avoiding a bus full of kids, got stuck on the highway, turned his bike around so he wouldn't kill them all, and in the process he was killed. Text: Joe lost control, went to scan, and gave his life to save these piles of children. And there at that crossroads was the end of the line for Big Joe and Phantom 309. The story of this song tells of A man who bought a used 1966 Corvette and found it came with a ghost soldier named Private Malone. One rainy night, while driving too fast, he missed the pavement and crashed the car. Witnesses to the crash said they saw a soldier pull him out of the car. Text: But for every dream it breaks, there's another that comes true. This car was a dream about his back when it was new. And I know I wouldn't be here if he wasn't with him. Yes, I was with Private Malone the other night. This song tells of a terrible car accident. A woman was driving with a man like the passenger. She claims the man she took (who happily married) said he was sick and needed a ride to the hospital. The man died in the incident, but his ring wasn't on his finger. The truth was found by one of the man's children, who found the ring in the glove box in a matchbox. Instead of saying his father was having an affair, he threw the ring into a well. Text: A small matchbox, round with a rubber band and in the ring from the hand of Walter Browning. And it took me a while to figure out what it meant. The truth about the Carroll County incident. This song tells a different story about meeting the spirit of Hank Williams. This time he's a hitchhiker on his way to Nashville, and the spirit gives him career advice, saying it's a long and difficult road. Text: He said That's where you're going down, boy. I'm going back to Alabama. And when I got out of the Cadillac, I said thank you very much. You don't have to call me sir, sir. The whole world calls me Hank. This song is about a man who saved his money in jars and buried it. One day, three greedy brothers decided to kill him and steal his money, but when they tried to get away, they got caught in the quicksand and also died. 50 years later, if you go back to the swamp by the shed where he lived, you can hear three young men screaming and laughing at an old man. You can hear an old man laughing. Watch a music video Used memorably on the soundtrack next to Smokey and Bandit, this truck song has a 16-wheel-drive of energy behind it as it buzzes along the road without brakes. Text for The Road: Keep your foot firmly on the pedal. Son, it doesn't matter the brakes. Let everything hang out, because we have to go for a run. Listen, a lonely man feels far from everything in the world. This classic Dwight Yoakam is perfect for a two-lane trip in the middle of no where. - Yes, but it's not. Text for the Road: I'm a thousand miles from nowhere, time doesn't matter to me. Because I'm thousands of miles from nowhere, and there's no place I want to be. Who wouldn't be obsessed with a truck when it brings women, fame and one of the greatest country songs of the '90s? Joe Diffie, you did it again. Text for The Road: You know, if it weren't for the trucks, we wouldn't have traffic. I met all my wives in traffic jams. There's something women like about a man in a pickup truck. This too concert by Robert Earl Keane tells a story about women, booze and murder. If I Spy gets old, this stretching crime story is sure to entertain you as kind.
